CHRONIC ILLNESS AND CAREGIVING, 2000: [UNITED STATES]
(ICPSR 3402)

SUMMARY: The objective of this survey, which interviewed individuals from the general public, chronically ill persons, and informal caregivers, was threefold: (1) to assess public awareness of chronic care issues and the level of support for chronic care policy initiatives, (2) to examine experiences and needs of chronically ill Americans concerning health care and other assistance, and (3) to evaluate experiences and needs of informal caregivers. Questions to the general public addressed awareness of the availability of supportive and housing services for the chronically ill, knowledge about coverage of long-term care, concerns about the future of the chronic care delivery system, support for policy initiatives such as tax credits for the chronically ill and caregivers, and support for a policy that would ensure pharmaceutical coverage in Medicare. Chronically ill interviewees responded to questions about access to and experience with chronic care and other health care services, plus experiences with and needs for clinical services coordination, social supports and interventions, and adjustment skills and knowledge. Questions for informal caregivers focused on experiences with caregiving (e.g., for whom they provided care, how many hours they devoted to caregiving per week, and living arrangements), balance between caregiving and other areas of their lives, experiences with and needs for respite care, and availability of social supports for caregivers.

UNIVERSE: Persons aged 18 and older in the United States.

SAMPLING: A national cross-section of adults was selected. Persons with a chronic illness and adults who provided informal caregiving services were oversampled. In all, interviews were conducted with 663 chronically ill persons and 320 caregivers.

Methodology

Chronic Illness and Caregiving was conducted by Harris Interactive Inc. on behalf of The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, Johns Hopkins University, and Partnership for Solutions. The survey was conducted from March 17, 2000 through November 22, 2000 with a total of 1,663 adults 18 years of age and older. This study included a national cross-section of 1,490 adults, with an additional oversample of persons with a chronic illness and adults who provide informal caregiving services, for a total of 663 chronically ill and 320 caregivers. The survey was conducted from the centralized telephone research centers of Harris Interactive Inc. in Youngstown, Ohio and Binghamton, New York.

The survey data were weighted to reflect the demographic composition of the U.S. population to the following variables: age, education, race/ethnicity, insurance status, household size, and number of telephone lines in a household, using the March 1999 Current Population Survey from the U.S. Census Bureau. Additionally, the data were weighted to adjust for the oversample of the chronically ill and caregivers.
